Under the Black Flag.

They say the buccaneers have passed; That pirates now are out of date: That Captain Kidd and such at last Have all been wiped from off the slate; Rare humor this-a brand as keen As any comic opera prance. As long as in some submarine A German mongrel waits the chance.

You think the Black Flag out of date? That "skull and bones" no longer flu? The murder-loving "second mate" With love of torture in his eye? Gonef Yes, but even at his worst Back in some dim, barbaric year. No pirate warred on women first Nor murdered children with a cheer,

Chief of the world-famed buccancers To whom the pirates' game is tag, Foulest beyond unnumbered years To war beneath the Sable Flag-Come-come-yo old throat-cutting band-Ye cutlassed Rogers and Lafittes-Salaam ye now by sea and land Where your red chief, the Kaiser, sits.

"Maybe I am all wrong," writes a non-combatant, "but strictly as a sporting proposition, was there any justification for Germany sinking the Lusitania?" We may be in error, but we have never yet figured that sportsmanship with the staff that made him famous. and murder were in any way adjacent symbols.

Coombs for three years has been rated among those who had seen their day. At one stage he had little chance even This, however, has nothing to do with the case of Fritz for his life. Then it was figured that with luck at its best he would still be a cripple and an invalid. But Jack, with his customary philosophy and courage, never gave up the fight. He stuck to the job of getting well without a whisper of complaint. He kept his head up and his heart in the right place. And to-day he is charged with two victories out of two starts against the league leaders of the early race-and in each contest the ex-Mackian premier gave a display of winning form. Coomba is a good, oldfushioned type of man-a credit to the game. His return is one of the most cheerful incidents of the 1915 race.
